224 million deal completed here for giant cement plant

By Jenab Tutunji
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN, May 10 — Jordan and Japan's Mitsubishi Corporation today signed a $224 million turnkey contract here for the construction and supply of equipment for a giant cement plant at Rashadiyah, 200 kilometres north of Amman.

The plant will have an annual capacity of two million tons of Portland cement when full production is reached about three years from now. It will be the latest technology, developed by Kobe Steel of Japan, the contractor for the project.

Steel, which will be in the design and supply of the plant, will be using its latest technology, a combination of kiln and roller with the innovation that mix of limestone, clay and burnt or precalcinated clinker, saving on energy and wear and tear on the plant.

The plant will have two production lines, each producing one million tons of cement a year, mainly for Saudi Arabia and though growing domestic demand may eat up part of the first line should come into operation by the end of 1983 and the second about six months later.

The Rashadiyah plant will have four times the annual capacity of the five existing plants of the Jordan Cement Company in Fuhes. The plant is now under construction and will have an output of about 60,000 tons a year.

and will use the same technology as the Rashadiyah plant.

National Planning Council President Hanna Odeh signed the contract on behalf of the founding committee of the Rashadiyah cement factory, which has not been officially named yet. The company will have an authorised capital of JD 45 million. Seventy-five per cent of the shares will be owned by the government, the Industrial Development Bank, the Pension Fund, the Post Office Savings Fund, the Jordan Cement Factories Company, the universities of Jordan and Yarmouk and Arab governments. The remaining 25 per cent will be offered for public subscription.

The contract with Mitsubishi provides for a $116.5 million supplier credit loan at 7.75 per cent annual interest to be repaid in 16 semi-annual installments over eight years. The first installment will be due 4.5 months from today.

An additional JD 10 million will be required for related investments in quarrying equipment and trucks and housing for the plant's 350 employees and their families. Further money will be needed for a 133-kilovolt power transmission line from Zarqa to Rashadiyah and a substation at Rashadiyah.

Mitterrand beats Giscard

PARIS, May 10 (Agencies) — Socialist Francois Mitterrand defeated Mr. Valery Giscard d'Estaing in today's run-off election for the French presidency.

Predictions based on early returns gave Mr. Mitterrand 52 per cent of the vote to Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's 48 per cent. Voter turnout was reported heavy.

French television stations predicted that Mr. Mitterrand, 64, had won soon after initial returns came in. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing thereupon conceded defeat.

A message issued by the Elysee Palace to Mr. Mitterrand and read on the TF-1 television station said: "I send my best wishes to Francois Mitterrand on his election to the presidency."

The TF-1 station said the Socialist leader would take around 51.7 per cent of the 48.3 per cent for the president, who was seeking a second seven-year term.

The Antenne-2 television station gave Mr. Mitterrand, making his third bid for the presidency in 15 years, 51.7 per cent against 48.3 per cent for Mr. Giscard d'Estaing.

The result was France's biggest political upset since the late Gen. Charles de Gaulle created France's Fifth Republic in 1958 and became its first president in 1959.

Computer predictions based on interior ministry figures from across the country said almost 80 per cent of the electorate would have voted by the time the polls closed at 6 p.m. in the provinces and 8 p.m. in the major cities.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin tonight praised Mr. Mitterrand as a "true friend of Israel" and said he hoped the president-elect would accept an invitation to visit Israel.

Mr. Begin interrupted a political speech to supporters in Israel to announce Mr. Mitterrand's victory, and the audience jumped to its feet cheering.

Mr. Begin last week was harshly critical of Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, suggesting that France's Middle East policy was governed by greed for oil.

Mr. Mitterrand has supported the U.S.-endorsed Camp David accord which led to the Egypt-Israel peace treaty. But he has also said that the Palestine Liberation Organisation is "very likely the most representative of Palestinian aspirations."

Mr. Mitterrand and Mr. Giscard d'Estaing were the two survivors of the first round of voting two weeks ago, in which the other two major contenders for the presidency, Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac and Communist Party leader Georges Marchais, were eliminated.

The Socialist leader, while carefully avoiding alienating Communist voters, also sought to woo traditional Gaullist voters who cast their ballots for Mr. Chirac in the first round.

Mr. Mitterrand centred his attack on Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's failure to prevent rising unemployment which stands at 1.7 million, or around seven per cent of the work force, and an annual inflation rate of around 13 per cent.

But many non-Socialist voters were angered by what they saw as the president's increasingly autocratic style of rule in the past few years and his identification of himself with the French state.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing also was harried throughout the campaign. (Continued on page 2)

Habib, Assad discuss missiles

DAMASCUS, May 10 (A.P.) — U.S. Presidential envoy Philip Habib had a four-hour "full exchange of views" today with Syrian President Hafez Al Assad, with no sign of a breakthrough in America's effort to head off a Syrian-Israeli military showdown over Syrian missiles in Lebanon.

While Mr. Habib and Mr. Assad were talking at the presidential palace in Damascus, an extraordinary session of Syria's council of ministers adopted an "internal strategic plan" to confront any Israeli attack because of Syria's deployment of anti-aircraft missiles in eastern Lebanon.

Prime Minister Abdul-Rauf Al Karam told ministers Syria had drawn up an overall plan to face an Israeli attack on Lebanon and Palestinian bases there, an official statement said.

Syria has said it has an "unquestionable right" to deploy the Soviet-made SAM-6 surface-to-air batteries to shield its 22,000-man peacekeeping army in Lebanon against Israeli attacks.

The calm in the Golan Heights

the leaders at this time. I want a full opportunity to review the positions of all those involved in this situation," Mr. Habib said.

Israel has threatened military action to knock out the SAM-6 if superpower intervention fails to persuade Syria to withdraw them.

Israel claimed their presence could restrict air attacks on Palestinian strongholds in Lebanon.

A brief official Syrian statement on the Habib-Assad talks made no mention of the missiles. It reported that Mr. Assad had received a message from Mr. Reagan and that Mr. Habib "elaborated on his mission and also on his contacts with various Lebanese parties. An in-depth analysis took place in connection with Israel's interference in Lebanese affairs and also the Arab Deterrent Force. The repercussions of this on the peace and security of the region."

Trouble's far away from Golan

OUTSKIRTS OF QUNEITRA, Occupied Golan Heights, May 10 (A.P.) — Israel and Syria may be on the verge of a shooting war over Lebanon, but their old battlefields on the Golan Heights were placid this weekend, with more tourists than tension.

An Associated Press reporter who took a 100-kilometre drive through the heights yesterday saw some Israeli soldiers on duty — undoubtedly with the aim of impressing the Syrians on the other side of the United Nations-policed buffer zone.

But the dominant mood was pastoral verging on somnolent. A young couple walked hand in hand on a long stretch of an isolated road. Tourist buses ground up the steep climbs, and foreign visitors wearing orange caps provided by a tour organisation swarmed to the U.N. checkpoint on the outskirts of the abandoned Syrian city of Quneitra to photograph the lone Austrian soldier on duty.

The tourists might find a lot more to photograph on the other side of the U.N. buffer zone, in the city of Quneitra itself — or rather, in what's left of it.

The city was occupied by the Israelis during the 1967 Middle East war, when it had a population of about 37,000. Zionist forces withdrew from Quneitra after the 1973 war, but before doing so they levelled it with bulldozers and dynamite.

The Syrian authorities have left the city as they found it — its hospital a bullet-scarred ruin, its main church desecrated, its cinema spray-painted with graffiti in Hebrew characters. In a grim way Quneitra now is a tourist attraction, with travellers posing beside Yalashnikov-toting guards against the mountainous horizon.

On the other side of the U.N. lines yesterday, two young Israelis flew hang-gliders in stiff winds less than 10 kilometres from the buffer zone — apparently with no thought of the trouble they could cause if the kite got blown across the Syrian lines.

Considering the heavy bloodshed and fierce fighting in the Golan Heights in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars, the calm here was amazing at a time when pointed up the way the focus of the Israel-Syria conflict has moved away from this 1,149-square-kilometre plateau dotted with Israeli war memorials and rusty wreckage of military equipment, as well as 28 Israeli settlements.

Now the conflict has moved far away into eastern Lebanon. Despite the danger of fighting between Israel and Syria, Israelis on Sabbath outings can swim and sail in the Sea of Galilee without fear of being shelled, and motorists on the heights can enjoy seeing storks by the road, and foreign tourists can snap photos by the buffer zone.

"I watch the Syrians through binoculars," said an Israeli soldier who amiably chatted about his calm job. "You see a few trucks, but basically nothing is happening over there. In Lebanon it's different."

Bells and furniture were looted from this rubble-framed Quneitra church.

U.S. may ask allies to help out in RDF

LONDON, May 10 (R) — U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger will ask the West European allies this week for more help in defending the Gulf, possibly including an international strike force, a senior Pentagon official said today.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the Reagan administration's plans for the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force would be a major topic at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) meeting which begins on Tuesday in Brussels. Mr. Weinberger stopped here overnight en route to the talks.

The official said Mr. Weinberger would tell the allies the new plan to create an independent command for the force would not in any way dilute the U.S. commitment to Western Europe or its ability to defend NATO in case of Soviet attack.

Mr. Weinberger also will say that Washington is trying to bolster U.S. military strength in the oil-producing region but that "we don't believe we can do it alone," he said.

He added that though Washington would be seeking more allied help to create a new multinational quick-strike force, this did not mean the possibility of such a force would be discussed by the defence ministers in Brussels or that, if one were created, it would necessarily be part of NATO.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said in February after meeting President Reagan in Washington that Britain would be willing to participate in an international force for the Gulf.

The U.S. administration, before deciding on an independent command last month had considered shifting Rapid Deployment Force headquarters from Florida to West Germany.

The force was created by then-president Jimmy Carter in 1979 in response to the crises in Iran and Afghanistan.

But the senior official who briefed reporters travelling with Mr. Weinberger said some allied leaders — he did not say which ones — feared this would dilute Washington's military commitment to NATO defence.

He said this concern was one factor in the final decision. He also said Mr. Weinberger did not expect the planned deployment of new NATO nuclear missiles to be discussed at the Brussels meeting because "those matters were pretty well settled at Rome" by Secretary of State Alexander Haig last week.

Key role in peace talks for 'terrorist' PLO, says Reagan aide

May 10 (R) — The political activities of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) and its participation in Middle East peace negotiations at present, National Security Adviser Richard Allen said in an interview.

President Ronald Reagan said that he does not hesitate to describe the PLO as a terrorist organisation so long as the PLO practises and supports terrorism and secondly refuses to use Israel's right to exist. Allen was quoted as saying in an interview with the West German newspaper Welt am Sonntag. It is a very clear and fundamental position and the preconditions that it is impossible to discuss bringing the peace negotiations as these two conditions are filled," Mr. Allen added.

Allen's statements came as simmering war between Israel and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's views on the Middle East. Prime Minister Menachem Begin launched a verbal attack on Mr. Schmidt after the Chancellor warned that calling the PLO "terrorists" without distinguishing between its many factions would be the surest way to bring the organisation into Moscow's arms. Mr. Schmidt, who emphasised the moral claim of Palestinians to self-determination after a trip to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates last month, also supports the European Economic Community's stand that the PLO should take part in future peace negotiations.

Former Swedish prime minister Olof Palme said in a West German radio interview today that he shared Mr. Schmidt's views on Middle East issues. (See story on page 5)

AMMAN — "This is a thob (dress) from Salt, this other one is from Hebron and that one is from the Jordan Valley. All of them I gave new designs that make them usable by ladies in the city for party occasions," Mrs. Leila Jiryas, a Jordanian woman with more than 15 years of experience in costume embroidery, tells a visitor.

"The Jordanian costume has a variety of embroidered designs (which vary) according to the area it comes from, and when I introduce any change in the design, I always make sure that the traditional colour and material are preserved in the dress," Mrs. Jiryas told the Jordan Times.

Her interest in traditional Jordanian costume goes back a long way, she said; but she began actually to work in the field just 12 years ago, when she started a Costume Embroidery Project, in which more than 50 women are now taking part. "Most of the workers in the embroidery project are from the young generation, and I enjoy seeing that generation continue the tradition," Mrs. Jiryas said.

She added that she chooses her workers according to her needs. "If I need to work out an embroidery design from the Karak area, I just go to the people who are acquainted with the costume in the area and ask them to do it for me," she added.

"This dress from the Jordan Valley area," said Mrs. Jiryas, pointing to a trim costume with a green-embroidered chest panel. "Originally, this dress used to be buggy and huge, but now it is so nice that contemporary ladies can wear it on special occasions."

The embroidery project run by Mrs. Jiryas requires hard work, but it is interesting as a hobby, she says. "I pay the workers and buy the dress material, but I don't care how much profit I make, since the whole thing is still a hobby for

Mrs. Jiryas has been offered the chance to expand the business, but she has turned down the offers because they would mean she had to give more time and effort to keep the work going. "Some people have asked me to export to the United States and other countries, but I believe that would lead to mass production, to which I am totally opposed," she said. She added that she wants to keep the craft in its basic traditional form, and is working to teach young people to take over the job.

On the weaving and embroidery workshops run by the Ministry of Education, Mrs. Jiryas commented that students in these classes are not taught the traditional designs, but the latest modes chosen from European and American fashion magazines.

During her 12 years of experience with embroidery, Mrs. Jiryas has held several exhibitions in cooperation with the ministry of Tourism and Antiquities, and she is planning to hold another one soon.

Besides her Costume Embroidery Project, Mrs. Jiryas is also in charge of another embroidery project, associated with the Menonite Central Committee in Jordan. Mrs. Jiryas assumed her post at the Menonite needlework project in May 1979, and is still there. The project moved from Jericho to Amman in 1968, and the 70 subscribers who do the real work are scattered around refugee camps and cities all over the country.

Unique motifs

"The embroidery patterns (on

(the chest or side panels of dresses) are all geometric in origin," Mrs. Jiryas said. "Although some basic designs are found all over the area, unique variations of the one design are found in each separate village," said Mrs. Wilda Kawar, who has made detailed studies of the national dress of Jordan, both East and West Banks.

Mrs. Kawar told the Jordan Times that motifs appearing in the embroidery are frequently symbolic of everyday beliefs and events. "There is one (motif), called the 'Tree of Life', which is found in concentrated form on the Bethlehem dress, and variations on it are found on costumes scattered all over the area," she said.

Another distinctive feature of the village costume, apart from the pattern of embroidery, is the style or cut of the dress, which also can show where it comes from. The green chest panel on the Jordan Valley dress reflects the vegetation of the area, and the subdued colours of the Karak dress mirror the natural environment of the desert.

"The Jericho dress is very much like the costume of the village women of the Jordan Valley and Salt in Jordan," Mrs. Kawar said. "The dress is a very long one worn with a tight belt, giving it a tent-like flowing style."

But as the migration from the countryside into the city continues, the use of traditional costumes seems to be affected by the drift to more modern dress. "But despite that factor, the tradition is still preserved, particularly among the new generations; and this is something I am proud of," Mrs. Jiryas concluded.

The intricately stitched chest panel makes an attractive wall hanging.

Bringing women closer together

By Dina Matar
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Bored housewives who dream of getting away from the kitchen sink and the idleness of cooking can now find an outlet in Housewives' Society -- set up just this year.

Of course, the society is not just to relieve boredom, but to refresh and offer opportunities for women to exercise their talents and discuss mutual problems.

The society was set up by the Ministry of Social Development. Mrs. Hilwa Malhas says she is there to guide any housewife and to bring our women together.

Her foremost aim, however, is to make housewives more aware of their role in the growing Jordanian society. For instance, now inflation is so pervasive, the women that supporters of families to bear should, it is felt, be helped somehow. Women are urged to participate more actively in budget planning, and to solve economic problems of the household.

For women need to rouse themselves, and our Housewives' Society can help them do that," Mrs. Malhas told the Jordan Times.

By offering refresher courses and lectures, the society has been helping housewives take decisions and plan for the future. Many seminars have been held at the University of Jordan and at the Princess Alia Community College in Amman. "We were astounded by the great number of women who attended," Mrs. Malhas said.

These seminars mainly dealt with current problems in Jordanian society, such as the rising cost of living, and ways of handling the situation effectively. "We wanted our women to stop buying expensive things, so that prices would go down. But the outcome was not very satisfactory," Mrs. Malhas remarked.

Other lectures dealing with safety precautions at home were held last month, and many enthusiastic women attended. One housewife, who heard a lecture on safety measures, exclaimed, "I never knew electric appliances could be so dangerous!" Mrs. Malhas said that she has received many compliments on the success of the courses. To make women more interested in the practical and educational aspects of housekeeping is still not easy, however. Up to now most women have been going to the lectures just to pass the time, Mrs. Malhas said.

The Housewives' Society is mainly concerned with helping residents of the poorer, congested areas of Amman and its suburbs, rather than the "posh" districts. In areas like Ashrafyah, Al Nasr and the refugee camps, the bulk of the women are illiterate -- through no fault of their own, of course.

"We are planning some educational and training courses for these women because we want to give them the best," Mrs. Malhas said.

Women living in such areas also tend to bear a lot of children and do not have the time to care for them well; so family planning will be one of the main concerns of the society.

The society has already opened branches in Zarqa and Irbid, and has ambitions to spread to other areas in Jordan.

"The countryside needs our help," Mrs. Malhas said. Society members have been actively engaged in forming chapters in remote areas of Jordan.

"We have coordinated with the Turath Centre in Amman to give training courses for women there," Mrs. Malhas said. There will be drawing, painting and pottery courses, but surely the most popular one will be the embroidery and sewing course.

The society is now carrying out studies of work opportunities for women, which would result in part-time jobs for women -- many of whom are so occupied with their families that they have little time to brush up on their skills.

"These days, nobody expects a man to support a family on his own; women should help too," Mrs. Malhas remarked.

The society now has 50 members, and expects to sign up more participants in the next few months. To become a member, a woman has first of all to be an unemployed housewife. She must be over 18 years old, and she must be a Jordanian citizen. The membership fee is kept low -- at JD 3 a year.

"It is high time that the Jordanian housewife be heard of, not in beauty salons only but in every aspect of the country's growth and development," Mrs. Malhas asserted.

The Housewives' Society is mainly geared towards residents of Amman's poorer districts.

DE FACTONOMICS Arab brain drain

By T.A. Jaber

A one-week conference on international migration in the Arab World starts in Nicosia, Cyprus, today. This conference is sponsored by the population division of the U.N. Economic Commission for West Asia (ECWA).

There are indications that the magnitude of Arab brain drain has increased recently despite the expressed concern and the adoption of policies of inducement by some Arab countries.

Arab brain drain is a complex phenomenon. It refers to the outflow of Arab professionals, technicians and kindred workers (PTKs) to the developed countries of Western Europe, North America and Australia.

One of the difficulties encountered in studying Arab brain drain is the lack of reliable data on its stock flows, occupational classification and geographical distribution.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

AL RA'I: The joint statement issued at the conclusion of the visit of His Highness Crown Prince Hassan and Princess Sarvath to Tunisia includes a strong call for the consolidation of Arab solidarity and the unification of Arab ranks to confront the Zionist enemy and to support the struggle of the Palestinian people.

Needless to say, the renewal of this call, which Jordan has long advocated, is an affirmation of the consistency of the Jordanian position which believes that the Palestinian option is the only acceptable option and that there is no room for any alternative to it.

Although this clear position is not new and is known to everyone, the fact that it has been stressed now is a strong reply to the intensive activities in the area and the aggressive, expansionist intentions which Begin has pledged to implement.

Teeth for the 'buy British' campaign

By David Churchill

The British government has introduced new laws to make it compulsory for a wide range of imported goods to carry details of their country of origin.

The new laws will come into force from the beginning of next year and will apply to goods from five trade sectors — textiles, clothing, footwear, cutlery, and domestic electrical appliances.

Imported goods in these product areas will either have to be stamped with their country of origin or be accompanied by a label giving this information.

The move is aimed at giving substantial backing to the "Buy British" campaigns which are traditionally launched in the U.K. at times of economic crisis. The latest such campaign was launched last year by Sir Michael Edwardes for British Leyland cars. The January trade figures show that his campaign has met with some success, as Leyland car sales are up and imports of Japanese and other foreign made cars are down.

But the new laws to force overseas manufacturers to mark their goods with the country of origin has caused considerable controversy within the U.K. business world.

Many British manufacturers welcome any tighter legislation covering imported goods. They feel that U.K. consumers are being "cheated and confused" by the wide availability of foreign products which they regard as cheap substitutes for the genuine British article.

The counter argument is that it is the right and duty of the British trader to search the world markets for raw materials, semi-finished products, components and finished products which supply the best value, choice, quality, or reliability of supply.

British consumers, however, seem not to be unduly worried. A special survey, carried out by the State-financed National Consumer Council, found that most consumers would find it useful to know the country of origin — but that few thought it of major concern.

One consumer was quoted in the survey: "Well, I would like to buy British, but not if it's going to be a bad buy. I like to be patriotic, but not if it's going to cost me money."

Another consumer said: "If you fancy something and it suits your pocket and it suits you, that's it, irrespective of where it comes from. You're still going to buy it."

Yet another said: "I wouldn't go on strike for it, but it's nice to know."

The survey also found that some consumers positively wanted country of origin information, but only so as not to buy British. "We've got a Japanese music centre," said one woman consulted in the survey, "and my husband wouldn't buy a British one because he thinks the Japanese are better with electronics."

Given this apparent lack of consumer concern, many manufacturers throughout the world who sell to the British market must wonder at just why the British government has introduced this new legislation.

Observers of the retail trade in the U.K. suggest that one of the main reasons has been the determination of Mrs. Sally Oppenheim, the UK's Minister for Consumer Affairs, to press ahead with the new laws. Her determination, it appears, has been a mixture of professional concern for the cause of the consumer and a desire to "cool down" a raging controversy within the Sheffield-based cutlery industry.

Argument has developed over the practice of some companies of importing cutlery "blanks" from the Far East, silver-plating them in Sheffield, and then stamping "Made in Sheffield" on them. Such cutlery imports now account for about 70 per cent of the market, according to trade estimates.

The row has developed because some traditional Sheffield cutlery manufacturers who produce and plate their cutlery entirely in Sheffield — and legitimately describe their products as "Made in Sheffield" — object vigorously to for-ign imports being given this still-valuable description.

Mrs. Oppenheim has been drawn into the controversy mainly because she is Consumer Affairs Minister. But, ironically, she is also a native of Sheffield and a member of the Viner family, one of the major cutlery manufacturers.

Whatever she sought to do in this area, therefore, was almost certain to come in for strong criticism from the Sheffield cutlery community. But Mrs. Oppenheim's officials within her ministry have come up with the solution which they hope will solve her dilemma.

Under the new rules, the country of origin for labelling purposes will be the country where the "last treatment or process resulting in a substantial change took place." In the case of imported cutlery, this will almost certainly mean that "Made in Korea" will have to be stamped on the knives and forks, since silver-plating is not considered a substantial change.

But the cutlery companies thus affected will be able, Mrs. Oppenheim shrewdly points out, to add "and silver-plated in Sheffield" if they so wish.

OAPEC: Richer states should cut oil production

KUWAIT, May 10 (A.P.) — The nine-nation Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC) today urged key Arab oil producing countries with vast surplus petrodollars to reduce crude oil production.

OAPEC's annual report insisted that production cutback was one way of combating the menace of inflation and currency fluctuations, which tend to undermine the real purchasing power of oil revenues.

"The current glut in oil markets, in our opinion, provides OAPEC the opportunity...to reduce production and take advantage of the financial reserves that have been exposed to dangers of inflation and currency fluctuations," said OAPEC.

The report claimed that bank deposits of the Arab oil states were giving them "negligible returns," urging these countries to try to preserve oil prices through a production reduction policy.

It said this would "foil plans to isolate world oil prices from prices of oil in importing industrialised countries."

ECONOMIC NEWS BRIEFS

Kuwait expects 11% rise in oil revenues

KUWAIT, May 10 (R) — Kuwait expects to increase its oil revenues by about 11 per cent to 4.9 billion Kuwaiti dinars ($19 billion) under a proposed budget for the new financial year beginning July 1, the newspaper Al Rai Al Aam reported today.

It quoted budget figures showing Kuwait expected total revenues for the new financial year of 5.3 billion Kuwaiti dinars ($20 billion). In the 1980-81 fiscal year oil revenues were budgeted at 4.5 billion dinars ($17 billion).

The newspaper gave no reason for the increased oil revenues but oil analysts said Kuwait's main oil price had risen to $35.50 a barrel from $29.50 in the past year and the budget assumed further increases.

The budget is due to be presented to a parliamentary economic committee next week.

Kuwait produces more than one million barrels of oil a day and is a leading member of OPEC (Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries).

Kuwait lends India $60m

KUWAIT, May 10 (A.P.) — The Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development today loaned India $60 million to help finance an electrification project, the fund announced.

The loan carries a 3.5 per cent interest rate, to be repaid over 20 years, with a four-year period of grace, it added.

Turkey gets $6.3m loan

JEDDAH, May 10 (R) — The Islamic Development Bank said today it had granted Turkey $6.3 million loan to finance the expansion of its cement company plants.

Turkey has so far received a total of $220 million from the bank, mainly to finance imported crude oil.

Short-term interest rates sharply in Kuwait

KUWAIT, May 10 (A.P.) — Short-term interest rates rose sharply here and "hit a record high" week, a leading bank reported today.

It said the rise came about as a direct response to interest rate changes in the U.S. markets.

With an abundant supply of short-term available here at the beginning of the week, it were obtained at interest rates ranging from 11 to four per cent for overnight money, seven to eight per cent for one week loans, according to Commercial Bank of Kuwait.

Following the sharp rise in prime rates by American banks and the continued rise in the exchange rate of the U.S. dollar, local rates responded immediately and reached 15 per cent at times during the week, the bank reported.

It added that there has been a "scramble for loans" by local banks and financial institutions, honouring undisclosed commitments.

Fixed-period rates also were affected by trend, said the bank. It gave no further refinements.

Rudolf Hess turns 87 today

Lone survivor of the Third Reich

anne M. Schafer

Today, Adolf Hitler's 40th anniversary as a condemned to life in jail

ing and aging behind the walls of West Berlin Prison, 87-year-old Hess is a living relic, an unrepentant reminder of his nation's darkest years. One former U.S. director of Spandau, retired Lt. Col. Eugene K. Bird, contends Mr. Hess has been "buried alive" in the prison. Col. Bird said the former key figure in one of history's most murderous regimes has become "a mellow old man who refuses to even kill a spider that finds its way into his bathtub."

Mr. Hess's son Wolf Ruediger, a Munich engineer, calls his father's lengthy imprisonment "a scandal." His lawyer files a continuous flow of suits to get his father released. Despite appeals from the other allies for freedom on humani-anitarian grounds, the Soviets have blocked all attempts to release Mr. Hess. They hold him accountable for Hitler's drive to destroy Russia. Mr. Hess was known to be a devoted follower of Hitler. As the Fuehrer's personal secretary, Mr. Hess took dictation for Hitler's book "Mein Kampf" during their imprisonment following an unsuccessful attempt to seize power in Bavaria in 1923.

It was due to Hess's studies of geo-politics at Munich University that Hitler gleaned his theories of "Lebensraum," or the need to expand Germany's borders into the rich farmland of Eastern Europe. Hitler made Hess Deputy Fuehrer. But it appears Mr. Hess had little power in his ministerial position and was slowly overshadowed by others, particularly Air Marshal Herman Goering. On May 10, 1941, Hess flew a Messerschmidt from the Bavarian city of Augsburg across the North Sea to Britain in an apparent "peace mission."

He has been alone since September 30, 1966, when Nazi architect and armaments minister Albert Speer and Baldur von Schirach, the Nazi youth leader, completed their 20-year sentences. "Hess is a very, very proud man," said Col. Bird, who wrote a book about his interviews with Hess. "He is very touchy, particularly when talking about the past. He will not admit to any guilt. He is not too easy to like."

Hitler charged Hess's mysterious flight was the action of a "madman." Due to eccentric behaviour and lapses of memory after his arrest — which Col. Bird quotes Hess as saying he faked — speculation has arisen about Hess's mental stability. Over the years, he has made several suicide attempts, the most recent in 1977. "Hess may be peculiar, but he is not insane," said Col. Bird, adding that these close to him say the 87-year-old is still "very bright and very alert" despite a recent bout with pneumonia. Mr. Hess is allowed one censored, 2,000 word letter a week and may send one such letter each week. Every day he is given four newspapers — three West German and one East German — which have been censored to remove any references to his case or such things as neo-Nazis or the Third Reich. He is allowed two walks in the prison garden where he throws bread crumbs to the birds.

Individual contributions range from $375,000 from France, present because of its Caribbean dependencies, $250,000 from Mexico and $230,000 from Venezuela to around $16,500 each from Barbados, Haiti and Nicaragua.

The United States supported the action plan, but said it was unable to make a pledge to the fund, though it indicated a willingness to help finance specific projects. Until the early 1970s, some Caribbean governments felt that a programme to protect their marine environment was unnecessary. Now many believe sound and systematic environmental planning is essential for efficient and lasting economic development. Many of the English-speaking territories depend on tourism and the preservation of an unpolluted Caribbean is of paramount importance to them. At present many countries do not have the ability or equipment to deal with the potential catastrophe of a major oil spill. The Secretary General of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), Dr. Mostafa Tolba, said the "Jamaica Accord," as Mr. Seaga named the agreement should lead to the strengthening of a firm political will to cooperate "in safeguarding a heritage which is common to us." Double dummy problems have been entertaining and puzzling bridge players for almost as long as the game has been played. There are those who believe that pitting their wits against the composer of the problem can be as challenging as dueling over the table in actual play. For those who enjoy problem solving, there is a new book that should appeal to them: "With Open Cards: 110 Double Dummy Problems" (collected by Eric Jan- nersten; translation: Hugh Kelsey. Published by Bibliogora; 280 pp; hard cover, $14.50. Available in the United States from Bridge World Magazine, 39 West 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025. In keeping with most British imports, the price is high, and some careless proofreading mars some of the problems. But the book can deliver many hours of interesting and entertaining mental exercise.

Eric Jannersten has been active in bridge journalism for almost half a century and he has dug into his files to collect a fascinating group of problems. They vary in complexity from relatively simple to mind-boggling. The problem shown is among the former. Declarer is in seven hearts with only six trumps in the combined hands, and West leads a spade. To make the contract, declarer must win with the ten in dummy, cash the ace of diamonds and run the ten of clubs. When this wins, he enters his hand with the king of spades and cashes his three high clubs, discarding all of dummy's diamonds. Now declarer leads the nine of diamonds, which is high. If West ruffs, declarer overruffs and leads a high spade. If cannot help East to discard on this trick, so he must ruff. Again declarer overruffs and leads the eight of diamonds. Assuming that West ruffs again, declarer overruffs and leads another spade from dummy. Even if East ruffs again, declarer is in command. He overruffs and can now ruff his remaining diamond with dummy's last trump. Notice that it makes no difference whether West ruffs the first two diamonds high or low — dummy's trumps are just strong enough to allow declarer to ruff all three of his diamond losers. As with all double dummy problems, there are alternate solutions, depending on the course of the defense. The reader might like to try for himself to see what happens if, for instance, West discards spades instead of ruffing when declarer leads diamonds.
